Chicago and EHESS students

Scientific Committee

Masha Cerovic

A historian and an associate professor at EHESS, Masha Cerovic is interested in the different faces, practices associated with “irregular” wars (partisan warfare in Russian) in the Russian (post-) imperial space, considered as political violence, whether deployed by “insurgents,” “rebels” or “resistance fighters,” or by state military forces of “counterinsurgency,” “maintenance of order,” conquest or colonization.

Adom Getachew

Adom Getachew is Neubauer Family Assistant Professor of Political Science and the College at the University of Chicago. She is a political theorist with research interests in the history of political thought, theories of race and empire, and postcolonial political theory. Her work focuses on the intellectual and political histories of Africa and the Caribbean. Her first book, Worldmaking After Empire: The Rise and Fall of Self-Determination, reconstructs an account of self-determination offered in the political thought of Black Atlantic anticolonial nationalists during the height of decolonization in the twentieth century. Adom holds a joint PhD in Political Science and African-American Studies from Yale University. She is on the faculty board of the Pozen Center for Human Rights, a fellow at the Chicago Center for Contemporary Theory, and a faculty affiliate at the Center for the Study of Race, Politics and Culture.

Gary Herrigel

Gary Herrigel is interested in comparative political economy, organizations and alternative forms of governance throughout the developed and developing world. He is author of three books, most recently Globale Qualitätsproduktion. Transnationale Produktionssysteme in der Automobilzulieferindustrie und im Maschinenbau (Frankfurt aM: Campus Verlag, 2017—with Volker Wittke and Ulrich Voskamp). This book examines recursive learning processes, upgrading and governance in German manufacturing globalization. Currently, he is working on a variety of projects, all having to do with the relationship between transnational self-optimizing governance architectures, learning and sustainability in industry and agriculture.

Romain Huret

Romain Huret is a historian of the United States and a professor. He is mainly interested in economic and social inequalities in the United States. His first book, The Experts' War on Poverty was published by EHESS in 2008 and translated by Cornell University Press. In 2014, he published American Tax Resisters, Harvard University Press. He is currently completing two books: one on the trial of Andrew W. Mellon's trial for tax evasion in the 1930s, entitled A Rich Man on Trial. Andrew W. Mellon, New Dealers and Democracy, and the other on bachelors from the colonial era to the present.

Alan Kolata

Kolata leads ongoing interdisciplinary research projects studying human-environment interactions over the past 3000 years in the Lake Titicaca basin of Bolivia, on the north coast of Peru and most recently in Thailand and Cambodia. His recent research interests include comparative work on agroecological systems, human-environment interactions, the human dimension of global change, agricultural and rural development, and archaeology and ethnohistory, particularly in the Andean region.

Chowra Makaremi

Chowra Makaremi's research activity focuses on the anthropology of the State, everyday and legal forms of violence, and processes of subjectivation at the margins. It also reflects on the methods of knowledge production and dissemination. It explores the ethnography of the State in France (migrations, national frontiers and social boundaries), and the ethnography of violence in Iran (post-revolution experiences and legacies).

Emily Osborn

Emily Lynn Osborn is Associate Professor in the Department of History and the College.

Osborn is a historian of Africa, with a particular interest in precolonial and colonial West Africa. She is currently the Faculty Director of the Senegal study abroad program, and she has also served as co-director of the Committee on African Studies, chair of the College's British fellowships committee, and on the Faculty Boards of the Center for International Social Science Research and the Pozen Family Center for Human Rights. She is also the Faculty Director of the Social Sciences Postdoctoral Teaching Fellows program and an editor of The Journal of African History.

Steven Pincus

Steven Pincus is a historian of Britain and its Empire, of comparative revolutions, comparative empires, and of northern Europe more broadly. His first book, Protestantism and Patriotism, was an entangled and comparative study of English and Dutch politics, culture, and society in the mid-seventeenth century. He traced the decline of apocalyptic thinking and the rise of notions of political economy in England and the Dutch Republic. His second major monograph, 1688: The First Modern Revolution, offered both a major revisionist account of England's Glorious Revolution and a reappraisal of the literature on revolutions more broadly. Since 1688 was a radical revolution, he suggests, it is imperative to rethink the nature of revolutions since so much of that literature assumed that the later eighteenth-century French Revolution was the first modern revolution. His third monograph, The Heart of the Declaration, argued that by placing the American Revolution and its seminal document, the Declaration of Independence, in an imperial rather than proto-national context it becomes clear that Americans broke away from Britain not because they resented the imperial state but because they wanted a different kind of state—one that would actively promote social and economic prosperity and equality.

Jean-Frédéric Schaub

A historian, Jean-Frédéric Schaub is a specialist of the Iberian empires during the early modern period. He holds a Global Distinguished Professorship in the History Department of New York University. He is currently working on the formation of racial categories in Spain focusing on the blood purity phenomenon. His first research criticized the concept of State to analyze the Iberian monarchies as Antonio Manuel Hespanha advocated. He is the author of Race Is about Politics: Lessons from History (2019, Princeton University Press).

Margherita Trento

Margherita Trento is a Marie Skłodowska-Curie research fellow at the Centre d'Études de l'Inde et de l'Asie du Sud (CEIAS) in Paris. Her current project, located at the crossroad of history, literature, and ethnography, explores ideas and practices of martyrdom and self-sanctification in early modern South India. Before joining the CEIAS, she was a research fellow at the University of Naples "L'Orientale" in the framework of the ERC project SIVADHARMA. She received her PhD in South Asian Languages and Civilizations from the University of Chicago in March 2020, with a dissertation on the social, cultural and literary history of Tamil Catholicism in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

She has authored articles on the cultural history of early modern South India, including "Translating the Dharma of Siva in Sixteenth-century Chidambaram: Maraiñana Campantar's Civatarumottaram" forthcoming in May 2021, and "Sivadharma or Bonifacio? Behind the Scenes of the Madurai Mission Controversy (1608-1619)" (2018). She is currently working on her book manuscript, titled Writing Tamil Catholicism: A Social History of Persuasion and Devotion in the Eighteenth Century.

Jenny Trinitapoli

Jenny Trinitapoli was trained in two areas: social demography & the sociology of religion. Bridging these two fields, her work features the demographer's characteristic concern with data and denominators and an insistence on connecting demographic processes to questions of meaning.

She has written extensively on the role of religion in the AIDS epidemic in sub-Saharan Africa, but religion permeates her research, even when it isn't present as a variable. Since 2008 she has been the principal investigator of Tsogolo la Thanzi (TLT)—an ongoing longitudinal study of young adults in Malawi. Demographers use terms like "relationship instability" and "fertility trajectories," but very plainly: TLT asks how young adults negotiate relationships, sex, and childbearing with a severe AIDS epidemic swirling around them. The TLT research centre, located in Balaka (Southern Malawi), is staffed by over two dozen talented locals and supported by grants from the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.
